Family & Consumer Sciences Education

- Bachelor of Science (B.S.) degree in Family and Consumer Science Education from North Dakota State University (NDSU)
- Minor in Human Development and Family Science (HDFS)
OUR WORK AS FAMILY SCIENTISTS IS...

Family Science focuses on strengthening healthy interpersonal relationships within all types of families — between parents, romantic partners, parents and their children, siblings, and other family relationships — at all stages of life.

Family Science professionals use research findings to create programs that will best serve families, and they implement evidence-based practices when working with families.

PREVENTIVE

Family Science professionals use an educational approach to help prevent problems within families before they occur, or minimize existing problems.

STRENGTHS ORIENTED

Family Science professionals believe all families have strengths. A strengths-based approach is about developing sustainable, self-sufficient families by helping identify and establish additional strengths — not by saving, doing for, or fixing families.

APPLIED

Findings from Family Science are meant to be used in the real world. Family Science professionals translate and apply research findings when working directly with families in a variety of contexts.

Drops & Repeats

No-Record Drops:
You can drop a course from your schedule before this deadline and it will not appear on your academic record.
The No-Record drop deadline is typically at the end of the first week for full semester classes. Summer dates vary greatly.

“W” Drops:
You can still drop classes after No-Record Drop deadline.
A “W” will appear on the transcript, even if the class is retaken.
The “W” does NOT affect the GPA.
Dropping below 12 credits can affect financial aid.

Repeats:
The most recent attempt replaces a previous grade – NOT the best grade!
All attempts remain on your academic record.
A student is limited to a maximum of three attempts in any course (graded – not W)
Withdrawing from all NDSU classes
